Now, more than ever, companies are reimagining the way we will continue to work

Because of the pandemic, new working realities have sprung upon us. Now marks the perfect time for organizations, companies and employers to recalibrate and think about their next steps.

According to our research, no employees want to return full-time, while 73% want to spend 40% or less time in the office. The main reasons that employees want to return to the office are so they can hold face-to-face meetings and in-person collaborations, in addition to breaking social isolation.

But going back to the office doesn't have to be an unpleasant experience

The last thing you want to do is welcome your employees back to a cold and sterile office filled with warning signs. You want to create a warm environment for interaction and collaboration to occur. To ensure employees feel safe, secure, and productive upon their return to the office, it's imperative to incorporate sustainable solutions that only comply with the current physical distancing protocols but will additionally retain their design value and health benefits for the years to come.

In this booklet, we'll show how to create such spaces with

- ready-to-use spatial solutions and quick fixes in warm, colorful, easy to clean materials for workstations, meeting rooms, and open spaces.
- a home office solution for employees that will continue to work remotely.

A long-term investment in happiness and health

Even after the pandemic, our solutions will still retain their value. Today, they'll create the much-needed physical distance to increase your employees' feelings of safety. In the long-term, our solutions will contribute to acoustically well-balanced spaces while tackling common issues such as echo and reverberation, in turn leading to happier and healthier colleagues.

1 How to create safe workstations

Desk partitions are a great way to create physical distance. They create a private space to get focused work done, all while maintaining a sense of safety. On top of that, desk partitions preserve a sense of collaboration and togetherness that is very important in the workforce.

Single desks

OR

- Create a private cocoon with BuzziWrap Desk

- Rotate the desk and incorporate BuzziWrap FrontDesk for more privacy

Communal desks

OR

- Turn one table into four private desks with BuzziDesk Cross

- Create personal space for everyone with the movable and foldable desk divider BuzziDesk FlipFlop

3 How to introduce privacy booths and safe informal meeting spaces

Instead of holding meetings in an enclosed meeting room (where the occupancy of the space needs to be taken into consideration due to physical distancing protocols) introduce privacy booths and informal meeting areas. Both are safe and healthy alternatives.

Privacy booths

OR

- Place BuzziNest in open spaces or corridors with a lot of passage to avoid isolation. The more noise or ad hoc conversations, the more Booths and Pods you need.
- Turn the upholstered sides towards workstations for maximum absorption of sound.

- Place BuzziRing in collaboration zones. An additional plexiglass screen provides added protection.

Informal meeting and focus areas

OR

- Use BuzziMe to create an informal meeting area with sufficient distance.

- Place two BuzziVille Hubs facing each other. Ideal for informal meetings in pairs.
- BuzziSpark is a good alternative.

— Add privacy booths to open corridors and corners to stay focused

4 How to support remote employees

You may allow part of your workforce to remain working remotely, at least for part of the working week. Working remotely will boost employees' work/life balance and additionally reduces office space occupancy, therefore allowing for adequate physical distance for those working in the office. A win-win for everyone.

Working from home requires a dedicated space away from interruptions and distractions of kids, a partner, or even flatmates. With our BuzziTripl Home desk and room divider solutions, your employees can create that much-needed area for focus work.

BuzziTripl Home Low turns a kitchen table into a small temporary office in no time, while BuzziTripl Home High makes the perfect room divider and hides visual clutter during conference calls.

Both solutions are easy to install, foldable, and lightweight. Moving them around and storing them in a cupboard or under the bed after hours is really easy.

5 How to clean our products*

Our products are made from BuzziFelt, BuzziFabric, and Trevira CS. To anticipate questions regarding the viability of Corona-type viruses and the use of additional disinfectants on porous materials, we can share the following:

Viability of Corona-type viruses

Current studies¹ show that Corona-type viruses survive longer on hard, smooth surfaces such as metal, glass, and plastic. So far, research suggests that the virus has a shorter survival time on soft, porous surfaces such as fabrics.

How to clean felt or fabric-covered products?

World Health Organization² advises the use of additional disinfectants, such as ethanol and household bleach. We can confirm that spraying these on BuzziFelt, Fabric and Trevira CS repetitively, does not affect the texture, color, or performance.

Ethanol

Ethanol can be used in its commercially available form (70% alcohol or more).

Household bleach

Household bleach can be used as a dilution, ranging from 1 unit of bleach in 50 units of water to 1 unit of bleach in 20 units of water.

How to apply?

Always use a sprayer. Never soak the product in one of the aforementioned solutions.
